

An Introduction to Considerate Democracy

Is it possible for humans to have a fair, healthy and realistic approach to social and political life?

If it is possible, what do people need to do for such an approach to be successful?

What is success? Can a successful society be accurately defined and measured?

What are the legislative, judicial and interpersonal features of a considerate, successful society?

How should an education for living in such a society be structured? What should be its content?

Why are these questions important?
